OVERALL PERFORMANCE

The Company’s operations are not currently revenue generating and the Company will need to continue to rely on its ability to obtain the necessary financing through grants and other financings to complete the development of zinc-air flow batteries.

Zinc-Air Technology

The Company’s zinc-air technology consists of three major components: the fuel tank where zinc particles and a potassium hydroxide (KOH) electrolyte are stored; the cell stack where the fuel is converted to electrical power; and the regenerator unit where the electrical power is converted back to fuel. In operation, electrical energy from a source is used to convert zinc oxide to zinc metal in the regenerator unit. The zinc “fuel” thus created is stored in the fuel tank until required. When stored energy is to be released, the zinc fuel is pumped into the cell stack where it reacts with atmospheric oxygen to produce electricity.

The system is designed to deliver power in the range of 20kW to 1MW and energy in the range of 160kWh to 8MWh. The system can be configured to support a wide range of discharge power, recharge power and duty cycle requirements.

The Company has engaged in the development of a zinc-air flow battery technology to participate in behind the meter (BTM), front of the meter (FTM), and microgrid markets. The system will provide various services such as

In contrast to the full certificate under NI 52-109, the Venture Issuer Basic Certificate does not include representations relating to the establishment and maintenance of disclosure controls and procedures and internal control over financial reporting, as defined in NI 52-109.
